

HISTORY® has many resources for teachers, parents and students who may be using remote learning during the COVID-19 crisis.

HISTORY at Home

HISTORY at Home offers teachers, parents and students a chance to learn about history independently. These resources include a collection of HISTORY's educational shows relevant to middle school and high school curriculum topics. We have curated these shows around key themes and paired them with study guides and related content so you can easily watch, read and discuss history's most important moments. Programs include: "America The Story of Us", "Defining Moments in American History", "How The States Got Their Shapes" and more.

history.com/history-at-home

HISTORY.com: Topics

Students can visit History.com/Topics to find original articles, photos and videos related to a broad range of history topics. The site is a great resource for history research projects and supplemental learning.

Visit History.com/topics or search in the upper right-hand corner of the History.com homepage for topical information.

Sample Topics: Renaissance, American Civil War, 1918 Spanish Flu

View HISTORY Education Guides

This Day in History

This Day in History helps students learn more about the past and its connections to the present. Each day, students can explore articles about what happened on that date in history. For educators and parents, you may want to suggest that your students start their daily history learning with TDIH. (Suitable for students ages 12 and above.)

Visit www.history.com/tdih to find daily This Day in History content.

This Day in History: An Education Guide

Additional This Day in History Education Guides

Sample activity: Ask students to pick one event that happened on that day in the past, and write a short synopsis about the event and its significance.

HISTORY Stories

HISTORY STORIES

Each week, we feature stories about the past that can help frame current events. This is a great way for students to make connections and understand how history shapes what happens today.

Students can read one of these stories daily and write a short synopsis or delve further into a topic. (Note: these stories are appropriate for high school students and above.)

HISTORY Stories

Sign up for Inside HISTORY email newsletters

Suggested activity: Encourage students to find their own stories about history in the news and write a short summary, an Op-Ed about the topic or a longer research project.

HISTORY This Week Podcast

HISTORY presents HISTORY This Week, a weekly podcast hosted by Sally Helm that examines watershed moments from our past. Whether or not it made the textbooks, it most certainly made history. With new episodes available every Monday, HISTORY This Week is a great resource to learn something new and stay connected.

Note to educators: HISTORY This Week is appropriate for upper level high school and college students.

Get the HISTORY This Week Podcast

HISTORY Film Corps

HISTORY Film Corps offers first person perspectives from military service men and women, featuring footage they captured from their experiences in uniform.

Go to HISTORY Film Corps

BIOGRAPHY

Biography.com is an outstanding resource for student research projects, classroom curriculum and for additional context about a wide range of people who have shaped our world. Visit www.biography.com to find many resources for lesson plans, student research projects and general reading about a wide range of individuals from throughout history.

Questions or comments? Is there something else you'd like us to provide? Email us at classroom@aenetworks.com